FILM PROGRAM

Buzz+
These films come with cred – you've heard about them, can't wait to see them and, goodness forbid, you're feeling a smidge of FOMO – and maybe that's a good thing... or is it?

Coast
Pacific Rim centric - from as far away as Singapore and as close as an Oak Bay tea party.

Currents
So much is going on – current affairs-wise, that is – here's a collection of stories ripped – yes, you read rightly – RIPPED from the headlines. Sorry, didn't mean to shout.

F1RST
Presenting contemporary Indigenous filmmaking.

Olio
Not just this and that, but also some of the other. Okay, so we wanted to use a more fun word than "miscellaneous." Can you blame us? You try spelling that over and over.

Pulse
The intangible, the nuance of life and... oooh please don't make me say the L word... the heartbeat. What drives inspiration, ambition, and moments of craziness. It's the beating heart of life.

QuirkD
We love quirky films! A magical director and writer wave some sparkle dust, turn their heads 180 and, baby, you're... quirkD. Think Stopkewich's Kissed, Lynch's Eraserhead. It's something about a one-word title? – maybe... not. Hang onto your pearls!

Sketch
Who is worth getting to know a little better? Artists who create great beauty? Women who have stood up for themselves? Athletes who reach great heights? Or maybe it's just Georgia O'Keeffe– because... well... what a life!

Short Bursts
Energetic programs of short films and new voices. Not on a boat.

THANK YOU DONORS

Whether you donated the price of a double-double or a whole stack of loonies, we want to say a massive thank you for keeping the Victoria Film Festival screen-side up! Running a world-class festival is a bit like trying to drive up a slushy Malahat in January—ambitious, slightly chaotic, and it only works if everyone pitches in. Thanks to your generosity, we've got enough "gas in the tank" to bring incredible cinema to our little corner of the Island without having to sell off our collective toque collection. You're the real MVPs (Most Valuable Patrons), and we promise your donations have been put to much better use than just buying a lifetime supply of Nanaimo bars for the staff.

WELCOME

Well, here we are Festival #32. Older, un-wiser, and somehow even more determined to cram as much cinematic mayhem, community magic, and joyful weirdness into ten days as is humanly possible.

First up: the pop-ups. Last year's beloved Toaster Rocket is blasting off again, now joined by Terrifying Toaster, a pair of late-night screenings cooked up for anyone who enjoys their movies with a side of adrenaline and questionable decisions. Bring a friend. Maybe a nightlight.

And while we are on pop-ups: the local DIY legends at Destroyed Cinema are upping the mischief, popping open their Secret Cinema at not one, not two, but three top-secret locations – okay – yeah, we've already spilled the beans – just check the guide. Hot-dog-eating competition diehards, consider this your mating call.

We're also unleashing a brand-new art exhibit—an animatronic, mischievous, horror-kissed playground built by a brilliantly inventive young artist from Squamish. It wiggles. It whirs. It might wink at you. Consider yourself, warned.

On the industry front, our stalwart gathering SpringBoard returns to the iconic Union Club, where filmmakers collide, schemes are hatched, and good ideas pretend they were planned all along.

And this year's gala? Buckle up. We're taking over the stunning Autonomous space at The Powerhouse. Poodle skirts optional but encouraged – I'm talking to you Bob. See – we do love diversity!

Films, parties, pop-ups, robots, art, diners, secrets—we've packed this festival tighter than a late-night Toaster Rocket crowd. Wander boldly. Have fun.

Festival Director

A message from PREMIER DAVID EBY

As Premier of British Columbia, I would like to welcome everyone to the 32nd Victoria Film Festival (VFF).

For over three decades, VFF has been a platform to showcase incredible local and international films. British Columbia is proud to be one of the largest filmmaking hubs in North America, and VFF provides an important platform for both established and emerging artists. With a commitment to inclusion, this festival uplifts diverse and underrepresented voices to share narratives that resonate with audiences and shape our cultural landscape. VFF is the longest-running film festival on Vancouver Island and continues to be a highlight on Victoria's arts and culture calendar. I would like to recognize the hard-working organizers, volunteers and sponsors who make this festival possible. To the talented filmmakers and everyone involved in the productions, congratulations and thank you for sharing your unique perspectives and stories with us.

I wish everyone a wonderful experience at this year's Victoria Film Festival!

Honourable David Eby, KC, Premier of British Columbia
David Eby, c. r., premier ministre de la Colombie-Britannique*

A message from Marianne Alto

On behalf of the City of Victoria, it is my great pleasure to welcome you back to the 32nd Victoria Film Festival. Once again, its an impressive line up of events!

The Victoria Film Festival is nationally and regionally recognized for its impact on filmmaking. The festival has made its mark in the community by shining a spotlight on local creators and emerging artists, providing a platform for often underrepresented voices.

Film allows us to spend time thinking about, and being challenged by diverse perspectives. Congratulations to the VFF Team for putting on a wonderful event that allows our community to do just that.

Thanks to Festival organizers and volunteers, enjoy the show!

Sincerely,

MARIANNE ALTO
VICTORIA MAYOR

Message from Julie Roy Telefilm

Festivals like the Victoria Film Festival play a vital role in connecting Canadian cinema with audiences at home and abroad. They showcase our stories, our artists and our creativity, while strengthening the bond between filmmakers and audiences around the world. Canadian cinema plays a key role in shaping and promoting our cultural identity. As audiences seek out stories that resonate with them, festivals bring us together.

At Telefilm Canada, our core mission is to invest in and highlight the importance of film. We support productions every step of the way, from development to distribution, so that Canadian stories are seen and celebrated. By working with our industry partners, we contribute to a strong and vibrant film ecosystem.

Beyond their screenings, festivals are places of dialogue, collaboration and exchange. A Message from The Honourable Anne Kang, Minister of Tourism, Arts, Culture and Sport

On behalf of Premier David Eby and the Government of British Columbia, I'm thrilled to welcome you to the 32nd annual Victoria Film Festival.

For more than three decades, this festival has been a place where stories come to life and people come together. It's not just about watching movies, it's about sharing ideas, celebrating creativity, and giving local talent a chance to shine. It's also a chance to see incredible films from around the world right here in B.C.
To the organizers, you don't just run a film festival, you build bridges for filmmakers, spark our imagination, and provide space for creativity to thrive.
To the volunteers and donors, your hard work behind the scenes makes all of this possible. And to the filmmakers, your stories remind us why films matter — they make us laugh, cry, and see the world in new ways.
Our government is proud to support the Victoria Film Festival through the Destination Events Program, and through our partners, Creative BC and the BC Arts Council. These investments help strengthen our creative sector and ensure that festivals like this continue to thrive.

Thank you for helping make British Columbia a vibrant and welcoming place for the arts. Enjoy the festival!

Sincerely,

ANNE KANG

In 1955, at the height of his fame, acclaimed playwright and filmmaker Marcel Pagnol is commissioned by the editor-in-chief of ELLE magazine to write a weekly column about his life. Pagnol considers this offer a great opportunity to return to his artistic roots of writing. However, with a failing memory and a sense of hesitation resulting from the failure of his recent work, Pagnol doubts that he will be able to write anything substantial. As his first deadline approaches, Pagnol is visited by Little Marcel, the youthful spirit of his childhood self, who encourages him to recount his younger years and find inspiration in his life's work. Together, they explore Marcel Pagnol's past, spanning decades and countless achievements.

During his busy life, Pagnol ascends to artistic heights in Paris, marking significant milestones during the dawn of sound cinema, the first major film studio in France, and turbulent times during World War II when artistic freedom was under siege. In a film as vibrant as the person it's about, A Magnificent Life crafts an engaging animated story of one of France's greatest writers from Academy Award-nominated director Sylvain Chomet (The Triplets of Belleville). - JC

Adam Carter Rehmeier's Carolina Caroline is a stylish tale of young lovers on the run that easily joins the ranks of Bonnie and Clyde and Badlands while breathing new life into the classic formula. The film follows Caroline (Samara Weaving), a young woman yearning to escape her small-town life and find her estranged mother. She crosses paths with Oliver (Kyle Gallner), a charming and unpredictable con man who teaches her the tricks of his trade. What begins as small swindles quickly escalates into a full-blown crime spree across the southeast United States. As the stakes rise, so does the heat of their romance.

Weaving and Gallner share sizzling chemistry in this sleek, sexy crime caper that packs plenty of thrills and a surprising amount of heart. Their dynamic gives the story an emotional undercurrent that elevates it beyond a standard outlaw adventure, balancing the chaos with sweet moments of tenderness and connection. Country music needle drops perfectly underscore their escapades, giving the film a soulful, distinctly Southern personality while reflecting Caroline's longing and the bittersweet rush of life on the run. Carolina Caroline is irresistibly charming, romantic, and an absolute blast from start to finish. - LA

This beautifully realized and emotionally charged adaptation of Helen Macdonald's acclaimed memoir is anchored by an exceptional performance from Claire Foy. Foy portrays Helen Macdonald in 2007, during her tenure as a fellow of Jesus College, Cambridge, where she taught the history and philosophy of science. When her beloved father, the award-winning photographer Alisdair Macdonald (portrayed with grounded warmth by Brendan Gleeson), passes away suddenly, the profound love of the natural world that he had instilled in her since childhood, comes into sharp focus.

Overwhelmed by grief, Helen retreats into intense solitude. Driven by an impulse that initially seems random and clouded by the mists of her own sorrow, she eventually conceives an audacious plan: to acquire and train a Northern goshawk from a local dealer. As the story unfolds, it becomes powerfully clear that the rigorous, all-consuming discipline of training the fierce bird, whom she names Mabel, forges a unique and demanding bond. The intensity of her relationship with this wild and uncompromising creature unravels a surprising path towards healing and a renewed connection with the world she had abandoned.

Foy navigates this complex emotional landscape with vulnerable precision, deftly handling the demanding falconry sequences with exceptional skill. Director Philippa Lowthorpe and her creative team—including cinematographer Charlotte Bruus Christensen and production designer Sarah Finlay—collaborate to access the profound, almost tactile emotion of this remarkable true story, crafting a visually stunning and deeply affecting film. -JD

With ambitions to write a book about Alanis Morissette's seminal album Jagged Little Pill, it doesn't take long before Pine falls in with the burgeoning indie music scene and works her way into the role of publicist for the up and coming band Bone Patrol, while ill-advisedly getting romantically involved with two of its members. MATT JOHNSON

Canada | 2025 | 98min

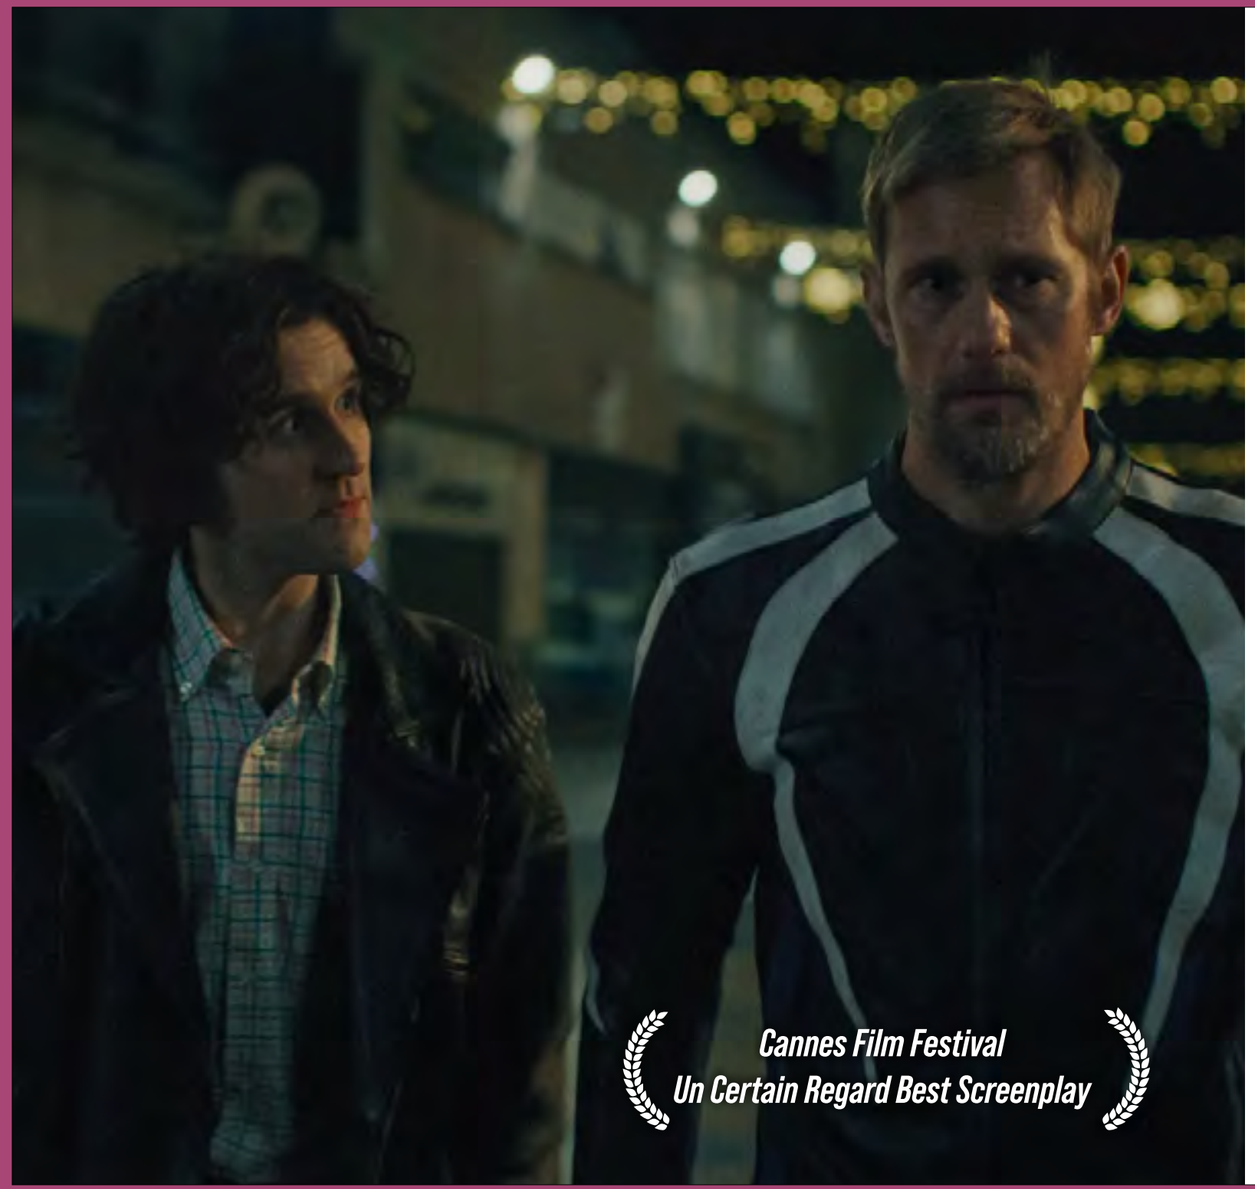

What started as a niche web series, where co-creators Matt Johnson and Jay McCarroll play an altered version of themselves as a musical duo desperate to get a gig at a revered Toronto venue, has morphed along with its cult following into a feature film ridiculously centered around time travel. Exploiting mockumentary's penchant for pitting exaggerated characters against the innocent public, Johnson's increasingly harebrained plans to secure a show and McCarroll's naive willingness to go along with him never make light of their unassuming victims. Rather, the biggest laughs come at the expense of these well-intentioned Canadians' desperate schemes to get attention at seemingly any cost, including an attempt to skydive off the CN Tower into a Blue Jays game. Joining a pantheon of infamous Canadian hosers, Nirvanna the Band the Show the Movie raises the stakes in a modern world where being famous for being famous is a talent in and of itself. -AR

Step into the unexpected, seductive world of Pillion, a bold debut feature from Harry Lighton, starring Harry Melling and Alexander Skarsgård as two gay men navigating the complexities of a consensual dom–sub relationship.

Colin, a soft-spoken thirty-something parking enforcement officer still living with his warm and supportive parents, is awakened by a chance encounter with Ray, a magnetic biker-gang leader he spots in a local pub. Drawn into Ray's orbit, Colin discovers a thrilling new world—and an enticing version of himself. Their relationship deepens quickly, with Colin embracing a role that brings him joy, confidence, and a sense of belonging within Ray's tight-knit BDSM community.

But as Colin grows more self-assured and begins to articulate his own desires, Ray is forced to question what it means to share control rather than hold it. Their evolving bond becomes a raw, intimate exploration of trust, power, and vulnerability.

Fearless, sexy, and surprisingly tender, winner of the Best Screenplay: Un Certain Regard at Cannes, Pillion is a "filthy" love story in the most affectionate sense—one that dives headfirst into queer desire and consensual power dynamics with honesty, and emotional depth. -KM

The constant hum of dance music powers a spiritual journey through the Moroccan desert in Óliver Laxe's Sirāt. A father's (Sergi López, Pan's Labyrinth) search for his missing daughter brings him and his son to a rave in the Sahara Desert, amidst a period of civil unrest. Latching onto the roving convoy of ravers, the travellers slowly find themselves embedded in a new community where music remains a constant release from the world around them.

Sirāt deftly moves between metaphysical drama and white-knuckle thriller in a film that evokes Henri-Georges Clouzot's The Wages of Fear with shades of Gaspar Noé's Climax. A bass-heavy score from French techno musician Kangding Ray reverberates throughout each scene and character of Laxe's film, funneling them through the liminal space between catharsis and conflict.

That Laxe's film feels post-apocalyptic in both its setting and structure complements an otherworldly energy channelled through the film's meditative trek through grief and mourning. Produced by Pedro Almodóvar and winner of the Jury Prize at the 78th Cannes Film Festival, Sirāt is a singular and immersive depiction of the end of the world that will leave audiences speechless while its characters desperately seek refuge from the chaos. -CC

The Last Viking, the latest dark comedy by Anders Thomas Jensen (e.g. Adam's Apples, Riders of Justice), centres on two estranged brothers whose uneasy yet heartfelt reunion sets off a chain of increasingly absurd and unsettling events.

When Anker (Nikolaj Lie Kaas) emerges from prison after a fifteen-year sentence for bank robbery, his goal is simple: retrieve the loot his brother buried before he was caught. But Manfred (Mads Mikkelsen), the only person who knows the hiding place, has a dissociative disorder and now goes through life as John. Not just any John, but John Lennon of The Beatles. And John Lennon has no idea where the money is.

What follows is a bizarre, darkly humorous road trip in which the brothers chase not only the hidden loot but also their own fractured bond. Along the way, the film explores love, identity, brotherhood, loyalty, and the fragile line between sense and delusion, all delivered with Jensen's unmistakable mix of absurdity and heart. And who knows: perhaps The Beatles will be reunited after all. – MS

The Love That Remains is Iceland's official submission for the 2026 Academy Awards in the International Feature Film category. At its heart are Magnús, a fisherman, and Anna, an artist—two souls from vastly different worlds bound together by a profound love. The film traces their separation and the evolving lives of their three children over the course of a single year.

Told through a series of vignettes, the narrative delicately portrays how a family navigates change with tenderness and resilience, capturing the bittersweet rhythms of shifting domestic life. Time itself emerges as a central motif: Anna's artwork rusts, while a mannequin repeatedly pierced by the children's arrows becomes a haunting time-lapse of transformation.

Unafraid of the unexpected, the film ventures into surreal territory—a dream sequence where Magnus is pursued by a giant rooster, or a montage of mushrooms torn apart in close detail. The result is a subtle, lyrical meditation that is at once funny, thoughtful, sensitive, and poetic. The Love That Remains offers a fresh, intimate perspective on the nuances that define relationships. - MS

Director Sophy Romvari's debut feature, which won two awards at the Vancouver International Film Festival, delves into her formative years with a beautifully composed and complex family drama that bends cinema conventions and memories' boundaries. For young Sasha (Eylul Guven), idyllic summer days in the late 1990s on Vancouver Island lend themselves to days at the beach, running through sprinklers and enjoying suburban life in the company of her Hungarian-Canadian family. But for her eldest brother Jeremy (Edik Beddoes) and her parents who find themselves at their wits end, life appears more complicated.

As the second act unfolds years later, adult Sasha (Amy Zimmer) rewinds time to give herself a chance to try and reconcile her past. Allowing images to speak as eloquently and honestly as the dialogue, Romvari masters the dynamic range of film as an immersive art form at its best, drawing audiences into the intimate domestic space of a family doing everything in its power to hold its shape, despite greater forces at play. -AR

Destroyed veritably co-sign CAMP as the best movie of 2025; CAMP brought me an elated, confused, brooding, psychedelic-like feeling I've yearned for since Twin Peaks: The Return. Fast is a bonafide tentpole of a brewing new-queer, DIY scene.

CAMP expands Fast's preoccupations with sisterhood, loss, summer, and esoterica through an unorthodox, idiosyncratic punk warmth that invites viewers into a BC-slacker forest scape before revealing a dark, complicated underbelly. I can only imagine how surreal and powerful this will be in the atmosphere of the lovely United Commons Church. CAMP is essential B.C. cinema. - Destroyed Cinema

Foreigner is the directorial debut by Vancouver musician, actor, and choreographer Ava Maria Safai that melds coming-of-age, horror, and themes of assimilation and cultural erasure.

In 2005, fifteen-year-old Yasamin Karimi has immigrated from Iran to a quiet town in British Columbia. Determined to fit in, she falls under the influence of Rachel Stanford, the school's reigning queen bee, reshaping her hair, her voice, and her behavior in pursuit of the ideal Canadian identity. Yet with each step away from her heritage, Yasamin unwittingly stirs forces far older and darker than the world she is trying to enter.

Safai's partly-autobiographical debut explores the undersung experiences of Canadian-Iranians and diaspora alike with a staunch critical lens unafraid to lean into genre. Critics have likened Foreigner to Mean Girls, Jennifer's Body, The Exorcist and Smile. - Destroyed Cinema

Mildlife is a raw, heart-thumping coming-of-age story about music, family, and finding your voice—literally. Lawrence just wants to drum his depression away in his hardcore band with his best friend. But he's introverted, they haven't booked a single show, and his girlfriend wants them to leave the only town he's ever known. Meanwhile, he navigates a complicated, co-dependent relationship with his parents, both living with cerebral palsy.

Written and directed by Cory Thibert, who grew up exactly like Lawrence, Mildlife offers a story rarely seen on screen: a realistic, unflinching look at a family living with disability. The film rejects tired clichés of over-inspirational or sympathetic portrayals, instead showing Lawrence's parents as fully realized, flawed human beings. In a deliberate act of authenticity, the roles are played by actors who also live with cerebral palsy, bringing lived experience to every scene.

Hilarious, chaotic, and deeply heartfelt, Mildlife celebrates resilience, love, and the messy, imperfect ways families survive. It's a loud, honest, and unforgettable story that will resonate with anyone who's ever struggled to find their place in the world—or their band.

Mildlife is a coming-of-age film that follows Lawrence, as he navigates every (not so) simple decision... one scream at a time. -MH

Victoria-born photo-journalist director, Jessica Earnshaw, earned rave reviews and a Tribeca Festival award for her 2021 documentary, Jacinta, an empathetic portrait of intergenerational mother-daughter prisoners against a background of addiction and trauma.

Her latest, Baby Doe, which premiered at the South by Southwest Film Festival, again proves Earnshaw's talent for achieving deep access with her subjects in this exploration of a harrowing true crime story, set against the background of the psychological phenomenon of pregnancy denial.

Gail Ritchey, a devout middle-aged Christian woman living with her family in suburban Ohio, had a baby when she was 22 years old in 1993. In 2019, Ritchey, now a grandmother, was arrested for murder when DNA evidence tied her to an infant's corpse found in the woods. When confronted with the evidence by the police, Ritchie said she was unaware that she was pregnant until she gave birth, and had no memory of how she disposed of the baby after it was born, though she asserts it was stillborn.

Earnshaw developed a close trust with Gayle, her husband Mark, and three grown children, before the trial took place, and this close rapport helped give Earnshaw access to police interrogations, consultations with lawyers and family reactions in a story that proceeds with a series of jaw-dropping twists. Unlike too many non-fiction films that exploit crime stories for vicarious thrills, Earnshaw is open to compassion and questioning the usefulness of punitive justice. - LL

Mount Everest continuously attracts climbers from around the world, keen to ascend its peak and join an elite group who have surveyed the top of the world. On the cusp of a world record, legendary climber Mingma Tsiri Sherpa had a prophetic dream that if he climbed Everest again he would die on the 'highest graveyard on Earth' joining over 200 frozen corpses, including many fellow guides.

As years passed and tragedies claimed more lives, Mingma's Buddhist beliefs led him to be convinced that the mountain gods were furious and he felt compelled to complete a mission of atonement. He would make a final climb to retrieve a fallen climber from the notorious Death Zone.

Filmed over eight years, this Best Canadian Documentary winner at the 2025 Planet in Focus film festival is a visually breathtaking and emotionally heartbreaking story that explores the commercialization of pinnacle chasing and the spiritual toll on the guides who call this natural wonder of the world home.

LATE SHIFT

PETRA BIONDINA VOLPE

Switzerland | 2025 | 92 min

The Vic Theatre
Feb 8, 5:30 PM

By 2030, Switzerland is expected to face a shortage of 30,000 nurses, as more than a third of newly trained nurses leave the profession within four years. Globally, the deficit may reach 13 million. With Late Shift, writer-director Petra Volpe sounds the alarm, portraying a healthcare system stretched to its limits by following one nurse through one night in a single Swiss hospital.

Floria is working the late shift — and she knows the drill. Experienced, steady and resourceful, she navigates constant understaffing with a level of multitasking that borders on superhuman. Between administering treatments, coordinating emergencies and keeping the ward moving, she somehow still manages to offer comfort, presence, and emotional support. Because a nurse, the film reminds us, is never “just” a medical professional.

As the night unfolds, the pressure mounts, tasks multiply, tempers rise, and the emotional weight of the job intensifies. The smallest complaints and sharpest remarks from patients land heavily. What begins as a routine shift gradually becomes a portrait of a profession pushed far beyond what any one person can reasonably endure.

Late Shift offers an urgent, deeply human look at the realities of modern nursing. It’s a film that may just change the way you see the next nurse you meet. - MS

MR NOBODY AGAINST PUTIN

Feb 9, 5:15 PM

Mr. Nobody Against Putin is a revealing feature-length documentary by David Borenstein and Pasha Talankin, following Pasha, a primary-school teacher in a small Russian town who becomes an unexpected chronicler of his country's expanding state control over education. In today's Russian schools, political expectations are woven into everyday routines through history lessons mandated from Moscow, patriotic assemblies and activities meant to shape a sense of national duty in even the youngest pupils, steering them toward a worldview aligned with the ongoing war.

As the school's designated videographer, Pasha is tasked with filming these activities as proof that the mandated curriculum is being carried out. Through his camera, he witnesses how pressure filters down from administrators to teachers and, ultimately, to the children themselves, who are increasingly pressured to accept military involvement as an expected part of their lives. Troubled by what he sees, Pasha continues filming as an act of rebellion.

When the consequences of disobedience grow sharper, he makes the dangerous decision to smuggle his recordings to Europe. The film that follows is a rare, unvarnished look at everyday life inside a system tightening its grip. It is told through the eyes of a man who risks everything to make that reality visible. - MS

Annemarie Jacir, the acclaimed Palestinian director known for intimate dramas like When I Saw You (2012) and Wajib (2017), delivers her most ambitious feature yet with Palestine 36. This epic historical work broadens her scope to rigorously explore the legacy of British colonial activity and the events leading up to the Arab Revolt of 1936.

The film incorporates a large and impressive cast, including renowned Palestinian actors Hiam Abbass and Saleh Bakri as passionate rebels, and Jeremy Irons as the high commissioner Sir Arthur Wauchope. The narrative follows various characters as villages across Mandatory Palestine rise against British rule. Central to this is Yusuf, who drifts between his rural home and the restless energy of Jerusalem, longing for a future beyond the growing unrest. As Jewish immigrants arrive seeking refuge from antisemitism in Europe, the Palestinian population unites in the largest and longest uprising against Britain's 30-year dominion. All sides spiral towards an inevitable collision—a decisive moment for the British Empire and the future of the entire region.

Ambitious in both scale and scope, Palestine 36 offers context, humanity, and complexity to the history that continues to unfold today. The film serves as a powerful warning of how the events of 1936, and the preceding decades of British colonial rule, would permanently mark the region's future. As Jacir stated in an interview with the Financial Times, this history is at "the origin of where we are today." - JD

The modern space race is not between nations but between public and private investment. As SpaceX continues to expand its domain under its controversial and outspoken leader, an increasingly long shadow of its 50-storey tall rockets looms large over an ecologically sensitive area at Texas' southern tip. Boca Chica is a quiet coastal town on the Gulf of Mexico that may one day become a bustling spaceport. The earth-trembling launches risk devastating the endangered sea turtles and ocelots that find shelter in the dunes. Curious onlookers have migrated there to witness what the future may hold amidst the search for a new inhabitable environment, all the while we have forsaken the only planet we can rely upon.

Recorded in black and white, with humanity's many shades of gray on display, this observational essay follows its eclectic range of subjects through this testament to our times. -AR

The origins of the first people in the Americas is one of the greatest mysteries of modern times. Some people claim the ancestors of today's Indigenous people walked here across an ancient land bridge that once connected Asia and North America until about 13,000 years ago. Others say they paddled here by canoe along the Pacific coastline, then dispersed to every corner of the Americas more than 30,000 years ago. Indigenous people in every part of the Americas have origin stories that describe how their ancestors came from the sky, the water or the land below. There's one thing that all of these concepts of arrival have in common - they all begin with a journey.

In the feature documentary Leaving Beringia, Métis Cree filmmaker Barbara Todd Hager embarks on a life-changing journey to eight of the oldest Indigenous archaeological sites in North and South America, where she'll discover that studying ancient tools is not the only way to uncover the ways of life of her ancestors. Filmed on location at sites that were once occupied tens of thousands of years ago, her ground-breaking conversations with Indigenous knowledge keepers and culturally aligned archaeologists will reveal a compelling new narrative of the first people of the Americas drawn from origin stories and Indigenous ways of knowing. -MH

In her solo directorial debut, Eva Thomas (Aberdeen), brilliantly weaves the intertwined stories of title characters Nika and Madison, played by Ellyn Jade and Star Slade. Nika comes back to the Rez from Toronto to see if she can mend her friendship with Madison, who prefers life in the community and in the bush. There is visible tension when they see each other again, and it is not going to be healed quickly because Nika rebuked Madison's offer to go to the local pub.

After being assaulted by an officer, Madison is saved by Nika who, despite her misgivings, still keeps a protective eye out for their best friend and relative. Feeling the panic of the moment and a healthy distrust of the system, Nika and Madison go on the run, from the Rez, then to the bush, and finally to the big city with the police on their trail. They work through the hard parts of their relationship and find moments of levity and a powerful resolve to stay free.

This film emerges from the director's previous short Redlights, where she exposes the euphemistic practice of "Starlight Tours," where Indigenous people are left outside to freeze after being picked up by the police. This film fearlessly aims the lens back at the system that Indigenous people are forced to encounter, while focusing on the resilience and integrity needed to fight back. - BC

Unfolding under the passage of daylight to night, Powwow People, is a striking documentary from director Sky Hopinka of the Ho-Chunk Nation. We are invited in to witness a Powwow that was organized by the filmmaking team. This community collaboration enables us to see intimate moments between generations of dancers, singers, and audience members, without the burden of an outsider's lens. Shot on the grounds of the Daybreak Star Indian Cultural Center in Seattle, Washington, Hopinka creates the film in a cinéma vérité style that remains true to the essence of the culture and the protocols of the Powwow, while also offering a look into its future.

The film opens with the familiar sound of a Powwow MC, Ruben Little Head, who keeps the ceremony moving with humour and guidance for the participants. He operates outside of the conventions of a typical documentary narrator. We also hear from Gina Bluebird, one of the organizers who sets the foundation of the Powwow; Jamie John, a non-binary jingle dress dancer who offers wise thoughts on the present and potential future of the Powwow; and singer/elder Freddie Cozad, who connects us to the past and traditions rooted in the ceremony.

The film culminates in a stunning continuous shot of a Northern Traditional dance special, which captures all of the vivid joy and spirit of the dance as well as the quiet moments in between. As the night wraps up, handshakes, hugs, laughter and the comforting voice of the MC welcome the next day. - BC

As the Brazilian government charges toward the future, it seems to have forgotten those who built the past, but Tereza refuses to be put aside. In this incisive social satire, a 75-year-old woman declines retirement 'honours' offered to her by the state. Using any means necessary, including making her getaway with a mercenary boat captain, she heads up the Amazon on a daring journey. Her quest for autonomy becomes both a rebellion and a rediscovery of life's untamed possibilities.

Denise Weinberg delivers a commanding and spirited performance as Tereza, embodying the vitality and defiance that goes with age. Her portrayal anchors the film with emotional depth and humour, inviting audiences to celebrate resilience in the face of obsolescence.

In director Gabriel Mascaro's fourth film, he continues his distinctive exploration of power, identity, and modernity through an imaginative lens. With characteristic wit and visual flair, he reminds us that where there is life, there is hope — and rebellion. – KK

Jimpa (John Lithgow) has spent decades living an independent, joyfully gay life in Amsterdam—far from his daughter Hannah (Olivia Colman) and her non-binary teenager, Frances (Aud Mason-Hyde, the director Sophie Hyde's own child). When they arrive for a long-overdue visit, Frances unexpectedly announces they want to stay for a year, eager to build a relationship with the grandfather they've barely known. Hannah, however, remembers Jimpa all too well: brilliant, charismatic, unreliable, and often painfully self-involved.

As the visit unfolds, old wounds begin to surface. Hannah must navigate her own resentments while giving Frances the freedom to form their own impressions of Jimpa. Meanwhile, Jimpa—now aging and feeling increasingly sidelined in his work—grapples with what it truly means to show up for family after years of distance.

Tender, funny, and beautifully observed, Jimpa explores the messy imperfections of family and the complexities of parenting at every age. Director Sophie Hyde (52 Tuesdays, Good Luck to You, Leo Grande) crafts a deeply human story about forgiveness, the intergenerational nuances of queer experience, and the unexpected joy that can emerge when old resentments are finally set aside. -KM

His latest film, which riffs on the title and themes of Roberto Rosselini’s Europe ‘51, is set in Transylvanian capital of Cluj-Napoca, where dilapidated Communist era buildings and burnt-out cars sit next to cookie-cutter new office buildings and housing developments constructed by multi-national companies. When a once famous athlete, now homeless, is evicted from his temporary basement shelter, the man takes his life. The bailiff who ordered his eviction, Orsolya (Eszter Tompa), is traumatized with guilt, telling everyone she meets about the gruesome details of the man’s death.

Everyone from her husband, a priest, and a bicycle courier, assure her it was not her fault — and that life must go on. A broad but incisive exploration of the way we live, Kontinental ‘25 brings both empathy and a wry perspective to the way we live now, from housing shortages, the rise of right-wing politics and the limits of performative charity, while suggesting there are no innocents in a system that is predatory by design. -LL

A cannon blast signals the unveiling of a new statue in a Manitoban town. As the crowds gather for the ceremonious occasion, they are unaware of the looming danger that approaches. After the sun disappears for an entire day, residents of the Red River Valley are left shaken by the cataclysmic event. The lives of a sculptor, a security guard, and a civil servant weave together in a surreal series of fractured chapters, each more mysterious than the last. A dreamlike trance shrouds everything as people huddle around the warm glow of the television screen, becoming hazy silhouettes against the unnatural landscape. Christian Petzold's hauntingly beautiful Miroirs No. 3 begins with Laura (Paula Beer), a pianist from Berlin, miraculously surviving a violent car crash during a weekend in the countryside. Though physically unharmed, she is shaken by the ordeal. A mysterious local woman, Betty (Barbara Auer), witnesses the accident and takes Laura in, caring for her in a motherly manner. It's a setup that seems like the start of a horror film, but in Petzold's hands it unfolds into something far more delicate and achingly human.

An air of mystery permeates the film, and a subtle tension gradually builds; yet Petzold is far more interested in the quiet, fragile moments that develop between two strangers brought together by unusual circumstances. The women eventually form a family-like routine, which is disrupted when Betty's estranged husband and son reappear. As traumas resurface and the past and present converge, the household dynamic shifts, adding layers of complexity to Laura's temporary refuge.

Petzold's masterfully minimalist and meditative style is on full display in Miroirs No. 3 as he guides the story with restrained emotional precision. Miroirs No. 3 is a beguiling film about survival, grief, and connection that gently washes over you.

Mark Jenkin, the visionary Cornish filmmaker who mesmerized audiences in Victoria with his abrasive folk horror Bait and the enigmatic, time-lapsed dread of Enys Men, returns with Rose of Nevada - a profound exploration of lost souls, forgotten communities, and the ghosts that linger where the land meets the sea.

The film opens with the inexplicable reappearance of a fishing vessel, Rose of Nevada, presumed lost to a savage storm thirty years ago. The local community is stunned. Two disparate men—Nick (a quietly intense George MacKay, star of 1917) and Liam (Callum Turner of Masters of the Air)—sign on to crew the resurrected boat, lured by an unspoken promise of the past. The moment their boots hit the deck, a strange, hallucinatory reality begins to unravel. The spectral ship becomes a conduit, opening a portal into an alternative existence — perhaps the past dragging the present backwards, or a reimagined reality.

Jenkin remains true to his distinctive cinematic language, capturing this eerie, time-slipping journey entirely on grainy 16mm film. The result is not merely aesthetic; it is a raw, tactile, and uncanny visual texture that feels strangely reminiscent of the rocks and sea foam of the Cornish coastline. His meticulous, artisanal approach extends into every corner of his craft: the film is developed entirely by hand, with all ambient sound added later as a dubbed mix. These techniques coalesce to create a deeply textured, almost dreamlike atmosphere that heightens the sinister and sombre mood of the work, inviting the audience into a truly immersive and haunting cinematic world. - JD

If you have ever had a desire to stare at, touch or tell your secret thoughts to... a tree, Silent Friend is the film for you. Hungarian director, Ildikó Enyedi (On Body and Soul), brings us a film which stars a majestic ginkgo biloba in a German university's botanical garden. Over a century, in three different eras, the tree observes humans investigating the communicative powers of plants.

Each section of this triptych is rendered with a different technique: In 1908, shot in black and white on 35mm, student Grete (Luna Wedler), finds a reprieve from the school's pervasive misogyny by photographing plants. In 1972, in grainy 16mm colour, a socially awkward farm boy, Hannes (Enzo Brumm), finds a connection with a geranium that belongs to a hippie romantic interest. In 2020, shot in crisp digital, the great Tony Leung (In The Mood for Love) in his first European film as Tony, a visiting Hong Kong neuroscientist, who, locked down in COVID, extends his research on infant neurology to the electro-chemical activity in plants, via Zoom talks with a French researcher, Alice (Lea Séydoux). As Tony develops a bond with Alice, he also finds himself drawn to the imposing ginkgo tree, adding digital sensors to its trunk and providing it with "tree sperm" from a sample Alice mails to him; if the tree doesn't actually smile, it definitely lights up in this sexy and enchanting film. -LL

Led by Oscar-nominated Benedict Cumberbatch in a performance of blistering and profound invention, this gripping thriller plunges audiences into the heart of a desolate family's trauma following the sudden death of the wife and mother of two young sons. The narrative, adapted from Max Porter's acclaimed 2015 novella Grief Is the Thing with Feathers, expertly captures the shapeshifting, magical elements and otherworldliness inherent in the grieving process.

As a dark spiral of grief descends on a once vibrant family home, trauma manifests itself in an unexpected and terrifying form: a looming, half-human Crow. The creature chillingly resembles the birds the unnamed Dad—an animator by trade—has been painting for his current project. What begins as a strange haunting quickly escalates into an intense battle of wills between the grieving family and their unpredictable, uninvited house guest and tormentor.

The film excels in its artistic commitment, depicting the full spectrum of desolation, hope, and the crushing depths of sadness that grief can inflict. Cumberbatch's portrayal of a man teetering on the edge of sanity is a masterclass in emotional vulnerability, grounding the narrative's fantastical elements in raw human experience. - JD

Kunsel is a young Tibetan immigrant living in the Parkdale neighbourhood of Toronto. In a community that simultaneously feels overwhelming, big, and painfully intimate, Kunsel spends her days recording the world around her, hoping to find a connection, until she befriends the mysterious Passang. A Second Life is a tender, quietly moving portrait of two people finding an unexpected connection in a city overflowing with noise. Elisabeth (Agathe Rousselle), a depressed, hearing-impaired woman managing short-term rentals in Paris, is struggling to stay afloat as the city plunges into the chaos of hosting the Olympic Games. Overwhelmed by the constant clamor, she finds brief moments of solace by removing her hearing aids to escape the relentless bustle.

Her outlook begins to shift when she meets Elijah (Alex Lawther), a free-spirited Californian drifting through Paris with no real plan. What starts as a chance encounter between two seemingly opposite personalities unfolds into a day of conversation and surprising vulnerability, as Elisabeth slowly lets down her guard and discovers they have more in common than she imagined. As they wander through cafés, apartments, and crowded streets, their exchanges echo the walk-and-talk rhythm of Richard Linklater's Before Sunrise, while the film's lyrical, observational style evokes touches of Terrence Malick's naturalism.

With vibrant cinematography and detailed sound design that immerse us in Elisabeth's world, A Second Life offers a warm, life-affirming exploration of friendship, fleeting connections, and the possibility of rediscovering oneself. - LA

There have been numerous Hollywood movies in the wake of the 1983 blockbuster, Flashdance, about aspiring dancers striving to bridge free-style personal expression with the discipline of ballet. What is different about the Brazilian film, A Wolf Among the Swans, is that it is based on a true story:

Thiago Soares, a poor kid and hiphop dancer from the outskirts of Rio de Janeiro won a dance scholarship in his teens and became an international star and principal dancer with the Royal Ballet of London. Set mostly in the 90s, A Wolf Among the Swans follows the cocky, homophobic street dancer, Thiago (Matheus Abreu), who uses the scholarship to show off and enjoy the extra-curricular benefit of pas de deux with the ballerinas. When his teacher suspects the brash teenager may be a generational talent, they invite the Cuban dance master Dino Carella to evaluate him. The openly gay, imperious teacher, and the rebellious, macho teenager clash, but they eventually form a deep bond over the joy of dance. The film concludes with a solo performance by Soares himself, in a dazzling demonstration of the fusion of strength and grace. -LL

Brendan Canty's debut feature, Christy, masterfully subverts expectations. What could have been a grim descent into the struggles of a broken working-class family in suburban Ireland is instead a deeply involving and genuinely funny portrait of resilience and the enduring power of family bonds.

Seventeen-year-old Christy (Danny Power) is at a crossroads. Expelled from his stable suburban foster home, he's forced to relocate to Cork's working-class northside to live with his estranged older brother, Shane (played brilliantly by Diarmuid Noyes). Shane, once himself in care, is finally turning his life around with his wife, Stacey (Emma Willis), a new baby, and a burgeoning painting-and-decorating business.

Christy's arrival, especially after a recent, viral public scrap, threatens to unravel Shane's fragile stability, creating immediate, heartfelt conflict. Yet, through a script that truly earns its moments of comedic sweetness, Canty delivers social realism with great heart. Brimming with integral Irish charm, Christy is a touching and essential watch that will undoubtedly win over audiences. -JD

Pete Ohs' Erupcja is a breezy, colorful film about coincidences, whether it is a chance encounter or a volcano that erupts every time Bethany (Charli xcx) sets foot in Poland. While vacationing in Warsaw with her boyfriend Rob (Will Madden), who has put together a romantic itinerary as part of his plan to propose, a volcano erupts. Bethany takes this as a sign that something in her life needs to implode, so she breaks away and reunites with her old friend Nel (Lena Góra), who runs a local flower shop. The two women share some potentially explosive chemistry, mirroring the volcanic tension brewing beneath the surface.

Erupcja has an ethereal, whimsical energy that echoes the characters' spontaneity, as the screenplay was a joint collaboration between the director and the film's stars. It is a poetic portrait of yearning that feels like a modern take on the French New Wave with a sapphic spin. Charli xcx shines in her first major acting role, delivering a magnetic and beautifully restrained performance. Erupcja feels like wandering through the streets of Europe in a euphoric haze after a reckless romantic encounter. It's a nostalgic, dreamy film about desire and longing. - LA

Director Daisy-May Hudson, known for her powerful documentary work on personal homelessness, makes a striking transition to fictional narrative with Lollipop. Drawing from a profound understanding of Britain's social care bureaucracy, Hudson delivers a remarkably accurate and impassioned testimony of the human struggle within a broken system.

The film follows the plight of Molly, a young single mother brilliantly portrayed by Posy Sterling. Recently released from prison, Molly battles desperately to find secure housing for herself and her children. To her growing horror, her domestic precarity creates a systematic barrier to accessing her kids, who are subsequently placed into the care system against her will. This decision creates a nightmarish paradox: without her children, Molly is pushed down the housing priority list, trapped in a relentless loop of "sorry but No" responses from a system that cannot account for real-world lived realities.

While the subject matter is heavy and often deeply infuriating, Hudson skillfully avoids mere misery porn, always leaving space for joy, friendship, and solidarity. A beacon of light and positivity is provided by Molly's best friend from school, who is navigating a similar housing dilemma. Their bond reminds us that even in moments of darkest despair, community support can help forge new paths when the established systems show only blocked roads. -JD

Los Domingos marks a compelling new chapter from Spain's rising auteur Alauda Ruiz de Azúa, whose films Lullaby and Querer have earned her acclaim for their tender, character-driven storytelling. Set in her native Bilbao, the film follows 17-year-old Ainara (Blanca Soroa, in a stunning debut performance), a bright and thoughtful teenager on the cusp of deciding her university future. But Ainara's life takes an unexpected turn when she begins to feel a divine calling and chooses to enter a cloistered convent, leaving her family grappling with shock, confusion, and a profound sense of loss.

Ruiz de Azúa, who was raised outside the Catholic faith, approaches the story with a unique outsider's perspective, exploring both the intensely personal spiritual journey of Ainara and the ripple effects on her family. The result is a deeply empathetic portrait of faith, choice, and familial bonds, where tension and tenderness coexist in equal measure. Soroa's nuanced performance anchors the film, providing a quiet yet gripping sense of mystery as religion increasingly shapes Ainara's life.

Shot on location in Bilbao and informed by years of observation of real-life convents and religious schools, Los Domingos is visually striking, emotionally resonant, and intellectually provocative. Combining Ruiz de Azúa's signature sensitivity with a thought-provoking exploration of belief, adolescence, and family, the film is a profound meditation on the power of faith and the costs of following one's own path. - DR

A very meta comedy-drama set in Ukraine in the post-war future, To the Victory! is a film about a film director, Roman (played by writer-director, Valentyn Vasyanovych), trying to return to filmmaking, working with his 18-year-old son, while his wife and daughter, who fled to Vienna during the Russian invasion, won't return to the damaged country. Roman's producer, Volodymyr Yatsenko (the film's real producer) and friend Vlad (Vladen Odudenko) persist in making their micro-budget, largely improvised film about men who are pining for their families in exile.

The winner of the juried Platform Prize for distinctive, creative direction at the Toronto International Film Festival, To the Victory! was made with a skeleton crew, who both acted in the film and took turns behind the camera. Rather than a conventional narrative, the film unfolds as a series of long-take scenes, some funny, some melancholic, about life in the future of the new abnormal. Several scenes turn out to be part of the movie-within-the-movie, as if concepts such as "reality" and "future" may be ephemeral. ("The only thing foreigners knew about Ukraine before was Chernobyl," laments one character. "And now the whole country is Chernobyl.") Yet, To the Victory! is also filled with affection and defiance. The jaunty, ironic title underscores that "victory" in this case, is not about vanquishing the foe, but continuing to persist. -LL

The Finnish farmhouse beer called “sahti” is a sweet, malty, robust ale with a touch of bitterness from juniper berries. Those tasting notes could easily apply to 100 Litres of Gold, Finland’s nomination for the Oscar’s Best International Film.

This poignant village comedy follows two middle-aged sisters, the irrepressible Pirkko (Elina Knihtilä) and the slightly more sensible, Taina (Pirjo Lonka), who share a house and a gift for making the best sahti in town. Unfortunately, they share a fondness for over-sampling their product and a casual attitude toward collecting payment from their customers. When their other sister, Päivi (Ria Kataja) asks them to make 100 litres of their best sahti for her wedding, they dedicate themselves to making the best brew they can; but they are so impressed by their product that they end up drinking it all. Chagrined and hungover, they strike out on a quest to replenish the supply.

Prolific Finnish director Teemu Nikki has styled the film in the warm colours and the widescreen of a vintage Western, with slapstick confrontations and rough humour tempered by authentic performances from the two stars and a realistic, non-judgmental recognition of the impact of family trauma and alcoholism. - LL

Beautiful and Neat Room is a strikingly original film by Austrian-born, NYC-based filmmaker Maria Petschnig that blends fiction and documentary with exceptional clarity and sensitivity. Following a fiercely artistic woman navigating life in Brooklyn, the story explores her decision to cohabitate with a succession of seemingly harmless—but secretly unhinged—roommates in order to afford a small apartment. Each bizarre, boundary-pushing encounter forces her to confront not only the quirks and extremes of human behavior but also her own norms and limits.

Drawing from Petschnig's own experiences sharing her living space with over 60 roommates across 22 years, the film achieves an autofictional resonance that feels both intimate and universally relatable. Through spatial minimalism, carefully chosen camera angles, and natural light, Petschnig creates an atmosphere that heightens the shared experience of fundamental existential questions while reflecting the precarious, often surreal life of a contemporary visual artist.

With a career spanning more than twenty experimental films and the acclaimed documentary Uncomfortably Comfortable, Petschnig has earned recognition for her deeply original, Kafkaesque sensibilities. Beautiful and Neat Room is a visually compelling, intellectually provocative meditation on cohabitation, creativity, and survival in the modern city. It's a film that challenges perceptions, sparks reflection, and lingers long after the credits roll—a masterclass in how autofiction can illuminate the human psyche. - ML

Hello Betty, a feature film by Swiss director Pierre Monnard, is a warm and spirited portrait of the woman behind one of Switzerland's most beloved culinary icons, Betty Bossi. Though "Betty" was never a real person, generations grew up believing she existed, a trusted companion who made cooking modern, simple, and reliable. Monnard takes us back to the 1950s to meet Emmi Creola, the real creative force behind the legend.

Balancing a demanding home life with three children and a husband who expects the familiar routine, together with her job at an advertising agency, Emmi constantly finds herself underestimated. In a workplace ruled by men, her ideas are dismissed long before they are heard. But with resourcefulness, nerve, and a bit of bold bluffing, she fights her way into copywriting. She invents Betty Bossi, an approachable home cook who delivers foolproof recipes for a new generation of Swiss households. What begins as a modest paper quickly grows into a nationwide phenomenon, with Betty even appearing on television.

With its polished, comedic charm, Hello Betty shines a light on the everyday struggles of women in the past — and quietly echoes how much of that fight still resonates today. - MS

Holy Days is a wildly charming, big-hearted adventure that sends three defiantly spirited nuns (Miriam Margolyes, Judy Davis, and Jacki Weaver) on the road in search of a miracle—only to discover they're far better at raising a little hell. When the sisters of St. Suzanne's convent face forced retirement, they stage a last-ditch escape to New Zealand's breathtaking South Island, hoping an ex-nun-turned-lawyer can save their home. Their journey takes an unexpected turn when a young Māori boy joins them, carrying a secret mission of his own: reaching the summit of Mt. Cook to find his recently departed mother before she crosses into the spirit world.

As a sudden snowstorm threatens their plans, this unlikely band of companions is pushed to the limits of faith, courage, and friendship. With echoes of Little Miss Sunshine, Wonder, and The Peanut Butter Falcon, the film blends humor, heartfelt emotion, and adventure into a story that celebrates love, loss, and the resilience that keeps us moving forward.

Backed by a powerhouse team of international producers, Holy Days delivers stunning landscapes, unexpected connections, and an ensemble of unforgettable characters finding exactly what they need—just not in the way they expect. Uplifting, tender, and delightfully offbeat, it's a crowd-pleasing odyssey destined to charm audiences of all ages. -MH

Through an unexpected encounter, Andie and Ryan (Leah Fay Goldstein and Peter Dreimanis, lead singers of July Talk) form a unique bond that makes them both question their current life paths. Ryan, single, is a plumber (with questionable skills) who cares for his aging father, while Andie is a high-strung wedding planner with a newborn and a distant husband. As she juggles these demanding roles, Ryan's carefree ways provide a tempting escape from the pressures of adulthood.

With natural chemistry Goldstein and Dreimanis' performances capture the euphoric YOLO moments of early relationships where personal baggage takes a back seat to unplanned adventures like afternoon pedicures and bowling, or last minute flights to sunny LA. Pavan Moondi's smart script and keen direction give the cast flexibility to make the story feel very relatable, providing enough moments of levity to land its dramatic punches. Like a millennial version of When Harry Met Sally, this modern romance is a refreshing take on a classic genre. -AR

Medical bill collector Dunn stumbles upon an unsettling secret: his neighbourhood laundromat conceals a portal to hell. Strangely, the other patrons seem unfazed by this infernal gateway. Before long, Dunn encounters a demon obsessed with bargaining for souls, who offers him a grim deal — save his dying neighbour by delivering three replacement souls. Haunted by guilt from a past transgression, Dunn must decide whether this twisted act of redemption could absolve him. A colourful cast of potential candidates emerge, each seemingly fit for damnation. But who will Dunn choose, and at what cost?

Portal to Hell proves that audacity and imagination can thrive even on a shoestring budget. Woody Bess transforms a hilariously absurd premise — a laundromat doubling as a gateway to the underworld — into a surprisingly poignant meditation on guilt, redemption, and the human need for connection. The film balances its campy humour with weightier themes of grief and isolation, creating a unique blend of horror and heart. With its inventive style and offbeat charm, Portal to Hell is a testament to how bold storytelling can elevate micro-budget filmmaking into something unforgettable. - RW

Every year, the sleepy Scottish village of Carrbridge welcomes a global parade of hopeful porridge makers, all seeking to win the coveted ‘Golden Spurtle’ for the best bowl of steaming oats and milk. This annual porridge making championship is lovingly documented by filmmaker Constantine Costi - whose whimsical, at times Wes Anderson-esque approach captures the irresistibly quirky humanity of village life, all against the breathtaking backdrop of the Scottish Highlands.

At the heart of this crowd-pleasing documentary, is Charlie Miller - a local porridge aficionado, who has dedicated his life to organizing the championship. With his health failing, this year will be the last under Charlie’s tenure before he hands on the golden spurtle to the next generation of porridge lovers. The documentary intimately follows Charlie and a cast of deeply dedicated, often eccentric, competitors in the anxious weeks leading up to, and during, the main event.

Much like the humble bowl of porridge, this film isn’t flashy or even particularly enticing on paper, but with only the simplest ingredients, Costi infuses this film with great comfort, humour and warmth. - JD

The title of Buddha Jumps Over the Wall refers to a Chinese traditional story according to which the emperor's cook made a dish so deliciously fragrant that a nearby monk leapt over a wall to try to taste it. In Pedro Peira's documentary, it refers to jumping over culinary walls, particularly between the Basque country cuisine of chef David Yárnoz of the Michelin-ranked restaurant, El Molino de Urdániz, in Navarre, Spain, and the cuisine of Taipei, where Yárnoz opened a second restaurant in 2019.

The documentary begins with Yárnoz's return to Taipei for the first time in three years following the COVID pandemic. After ensuring the Taipei restaurant is maintaining its quality standards, Yárnoz goes on a tour of the local culinary scene, meeting local masters including French-trained Yu-chung Li, who became Taiwan's first woman chef to achieve a prestigious Michelin ranking, and Chef Kai Ho, founder of the country's first three-star Michelin restaurant, Taïroir (a portmanteau of Taiwan and terroir).

An easy-going foodie hangout film, Buddha Jumps Over the Wall does a lot of jumping about, visiting restaurants and vineyards, farms and open-air night markets. Buddha brings to mind a favourite Basque culinary tradition: pintxo bar hopping, in which food enthusiasts go from establishment to establishment, sampling a variety of tasty bite-sized mini-snacks called pintxos (literally "spikes") with combinations of food stacked on a piece of bread and held together with a toothpick. When Chef Kai comes to visit Navarre, Chef Ho sits at the bar counter with a glass of beer, demolishes a pintxo in a single bite, smiles and asks his friend, Yárnoz, "How do you say 'yummy?'" -LL

Franz is a captivating dive into the inner world of literary legend Franz Kafka, brought to life by German actor Idan Weiss in his first feature film role. Under the masterful direction of Polish filmmaker Agnieszka Holland, Weiss delivers a performance that has earned him a European Film Award nomination for Best Actor and made the film Poland's submission for the International Oscars.

Weiss approached Kafka not by imitation, but through empathy, exploring the writer's profound sensitivity and sense of isolation. Drawing from Kafka's diaries, he crafted a nuanced portrayal that feels both intimate and universally human.

Holland, renowned for politically charged films like Europa Europa and Green Border, fostered an energetic, improvisational set that allowed Weiss to push the boundaries of his theatrical experience. The result is a performance that is raw, immersive, and unforgettable.

Franz is more than a biopic; it's a journey into the mind of one of the 20th century's most enigmatic writers, rendered with empathy, intelligence, and artistry. Weiss's dedication, combined with Holland's visionary direction, makes this film a compelling festival entry destined to resonate with audiences worldwide.

In How Dark My Love, director Scott Gracheff offers an intimate portrait of Brooklyn artist Joe Coleman, a figure whose life and work blur the line between art and obsession. Coleman resides in his self-styled Odditorium, a cabinet of curiosities filled with medical relics, macabre artifacts, and outlaw memorabilia. From this surreal sanctuary, he has built a reputation for creating painstakingly detailed paintings that surround infamous figures—outlaws, serial killers, and eccentrics—with the iconography of their lives.

The film follows Coleman as he embarks on his most ambitious project yet: a seven-foot portrait of his wife, Whitney, a labor of love that consumes more than three years. What emerges is not only a testament to artistic endurance but also a meditation on devotion, independence, and the unconventional bonds that sustain a creative life.

With energy and style, How Dark My Love explores themes of love, mortality, and the compulsion to create. It is a close-up look at an artist who values expression over commerce, and a celebration of a partnership rooted in shared passion for the extraordinary. - RW

Sketch

Filipino director, Lav Diaz (Norte, The End of History) is known as a key figure in slow cinema, an arthouse genre characterized by minimalism, long takes, and little narrative. Yet his latest film is relatively mainstream, in vibrant colours and far-flung locations, as it explores the history of the famous explorer, Ferdinand Magellan, played by globally recognized star, Gael García Bernal, who plays the role with a distant reserve.

After setting out from Spain in 1519 on a mission to circumnavigate the world, Magellan was killed by natives two years later in the Philippines, a country named after the Spanish king who financed the journey, and the director's homeland. First impressions aside, no one could confuse this haunting, meditative study with a conventional biopic.

Set over 15 years, sweeping in scope but tautly disciplined, Magellan unfolds in a series of transfixing painterly wide shots that set the actors against the natural landscape. There is no musical score, and devastating battles are not shown onscreen, instead represented by their aftermath with corpses strewn about the landscape, reminiscent of Francisco Goya's images of the devastation of war.

Like Werner Herzog's Aguirre, The Wrath of God (1972) and Lucretia Martel's Zama (2017), Magellan probes the violent legacy of colonialism, through the biography of a schoolbook hero who embodied the Age of Discovery's lethal blend of religious conviction, avarice, and European supremacy. -LL

In early 18th-century Venice, Cecilia struggles to survive in a secluded and cold orphanage for abandoned girls, where she and her peers are trained to perform in a renowned all-female musical ensemble. Hidden behind screens and convent walls, the girls play for tourists, dignitaries, and wealthy male patrons whose support keeps the institution afloat. Under the strict rule of unsympathetic nuns and with little hope for their futures, many cling to dreams that their mothers will return—or that an arranged marriage to a benefactor might offer a way out.

Cecilia, a gifted young virtuoso, knows that her only chance at freedom lies beyond the walls that confine her and hopes that her mother will come to get her out. When the brilliant and unconventional Antonio Vivaldi arrives as the ensemble's new instructor, he immediately recognizes her extraordinary talent.

Primavera draws inspiration from the real history of Vivaldi's nearly three decades teaching at the Ospedale della Pietà and from Tiziano Scarpa's novel Stabat Mater. Faz-Cade by Elias Lazenby

The Animatronic Arcade is a surreal, retro-inspired art installation that merges nostalgia with unease. Visitors step into a distorted arcade where reality “glitches,” and animatronics awaken in unexpected ways. The space evokes the eerie charm of abandoned game halls, blending vibrant neon aesthetics with unsettling mechanical life.The installation explores themes of nostalgia, decay, and the uncanny—inviting audiences to question the boundaries between play and fear, technology and life from a Gen Alpha perspective. Medium: Refurbished animatronics, retro arcade props, multimedia screens.

Artist Bio

Elias is a young emerging creator whose work focuses on bringing fictional creatures and characters into real, physical motion. Influenced by childhood puppet fascination, the creations of Jim Henson, and classic practical-effects films like Gremlins and Alien, he builds animatronic figures from found materials such as old toys, thrift-store parts, and cardboard. His pieces are designed to provoke curiosity through unexpected movement and stylized designs that transform familiar objects into something alive. Elias recently showcased his work at the Brackendale Art Gallery Haunted House, where audience reactions fueled his passion for building even more ambitious creations.
